→ Why invest in super?

BT Business Super can help you get the most from your super.

How you decide to invest your super today and whether you add to your super can make a huge difference to your savings at retirement. In fact, when the time comes to retire, your super is likely to be your main source of income and could be an asset that is worth more than your family home.

The long-term nature of super and the power of compound interest, combined with the attractive tax environment that has been created to encourage us to invest, gives us a real chance to make a financial difference to our future.

The challenge is to change the way we think about our super. Many of us find it hard to think of super as our money. Super is viewed almost like a tax; as money over which we have no control. However, although you can't access your super, you can still influence the outcome of this long-term investment.

As with any investment, you need to make informed decisions. To understand your super you'll need access to information, know what investment options are available and what other features and benefits are open to you. To assist you, we have included a 'Features at a glance' table at the back of this booklet which summarises the many benefits available in BT Business Super.

Taking an active role in the management of your super can make a big difference to how comfortably you retire. Taking control of your super now will probably be one of the most important investment decisions you'll ever make, so read on to find out how BT can help you get the most from your super.

→ Strategies for your super

There are a number of simple steps you can take today that will help maximise your investment for tomorrow.

Consolidate your super

Start boosting your financial prospects without adding an extra cent just by bringing your entire super together. Each time you change jobs you may end up with another super account to keep track of. Not only can this create more paperwork, but your superannuation savings may also be eroded by multiple account fees. Having multiple super accounts also means that you are more likely to lose track of funds as you change jobs or addresses. Remember, having several super accounts can make it harder to maintain a focused investment strategy.

BT offers a free consolidation service that can help bring all of your super accounts into your current fund whilst taking a lot of the legwork out of it for you.

Visit www.bt.com.au/consolidation to use our Easy Rollover Tool. The tool will create pre-populated forms for you, you just need to sign and send off to your old super fund with proof of identity. If you do not have access to the internet, simply complete the Rollover Authority Form at the back of your Product Disclosure Statement (PDS) Part 1 – Member Booklet, or call us for a form on 132 135. We can guide you through the process of rolling over.

Invest for your timeframe and risk tolerance

Your super is a long-term investment so, depending on your individual circumstances such as your timeframe and tolerance to risk, you may consider investing in assets that have the potential to increase in value over time, or 'growth assets' as they are also known, such as shares and property. BT Business Super offers you access to more than 30 investment options across all the major asset classes and from many different fund managers, giving you the opportunity to select an investment that's right for you. You can use the BT Risk Profiler available on www.bt.com.au to help you assess your personal preferences towards risk and return.

Different asset classes will experience various levels of volatility over time. Generally speaking, it is the same asset classes that have historically experienced high ups and downs in the short term (typically shares and property) that have outperformed the other more conservative asset classes (bonds and cash) over the long term. Particularly for super, it's important to stay focussed on your long term investment horizon and try not to get too caught up in short term market movements.

All investing involves a trade-off between risk and return. Tips for investing your super include consider the length of time you will be invested, what your individual comfort level might be with seeing your super go through ups and downs in the short term (some people are more comfortable with this than others), considering diversification across different asset classes or different fund managers, and try to avoid chasing returns (next year's best performer may not be the same as this year's). Above all, seek advice.

Pay for insurance through super

Protecting your wealth and family in case of sickness, injury or death is an important part of a good investment strategy. Paying for this insurance through BT Business Super allows you to pay your premiums using pre-tax dollars. And, because large super funds have significant group buying power, you could receive discounted group rates on insurance premiums.

You should refer to 'Part 2 – Insurance Booklet' of the BT Business Super PDS for full details on the insurance cover arrangements for the Fund.

¹ It is recommended you check whether your previous super fund will charge you any exit fees or other charges for leaving the fund, and also to consider any insurance cover you may have attached to your other super fund which would cease upon rolling out, and take both of these factors into consideration in your decision to rollover.

Contribute more

Will you have enough to provide the lifestyle you want when you stop working? Many financial commentators suggest adding to the 9% of your salary that your employer would typically provide to make sure you have enough for your retirement. A few dollars invested today can make a big difference to the amount you retire with.

Add to your spouse's super

If your spouse is not working or earns less than $13,800 a year, you may be eligible to receive a tax rebate of up to 18% (ie $540) on the first $3,000 of post-tax super contributions you make on their behalf. With BT Business Super you can also set up a superannuation account for your spouse, into which you and your spouse can make contributions. Spouse accounts can also accept contributions from your spouse's employer and Government co-contributions.

Before-tax contribution (Concessional contribution)

This is called 'salary sacrificing' and involves redirecting a portion of your pre-tax income to super, rather than having it as take-home pay. The benefit of this is that instead of having to pay your marginal rate of tax on that portion of money, you generally only pay 15% contributions tax. Speak to your employer's payroll area to see whether they allow you to make before-tax contributions by salary sacrificing.

There are some limits on how much can be contributed to super per year on a concessional basis. Salary sacrifice and SG contributions are counted towards your concessional contributions cap (for 2009/10, this cap is $25,000, or $50,000 if you are aged 50 and over). Your employer is not responsible for monitoring your contributions caps. You will need to monitor your contributions going into super so that you do not exceed your contributions caps. Your adviser can help you with this.

After- tax contributions (Non-concessional contribution)

These contributions are called 'non-concessional' contributions, but are also referred to as 'after-tax' contributions because they are sourced from monies that have already incurred your marginal rate of tax. People disposing of assets may consider placing the proceeds into super in order to take advantage of super's concessional rate of tax on earnings.

Non-concessional contributions also have annual limits on how much can be invested per year. The amount of non-concessional contributions an individual can invest into super is capped at $150,000 per year (or up to $450,000 over 3 financial years for individuals aged under 65).*

This type of contribution does not then incur any contributions tax when invested into super. The other benefit of investing after-tax income into super is that the earnings only attract a maximum rate of tax of 15%, as opposed to earnings on other types of investments, which are taxed at your marginal tax rate.

Government Co-contributions

If you make personal after-tax super contributions and your total income is under $61,920, you may be eligible for the Government co-contribution scheme. If you are eligible, the Government will match $1 for every $1 of personal after-tax contributions made to superannuation, up to a maximum of $1,000. You do not need have to contribute the full $1,000 to be eligible – any amount up to $1,000 will attract the super co-contribution.

* Those aged over 65 can only contribute if they meet the work test, which requires people aged 65 to 74 to have been gainfully employed for at least 40 hours in a 30-day period in a financial year in which the contribution was made.

 Total income = assessable income + reportable fringe benefit + reportable employer superannuation contributions (RESC). RESC are generally salary sacrifice contributions. RESC specifically excludes superannuation guarantee (SG) payments and mandated employer contributions.
